Communication and Language with Vocabulary Bank – May 2023

Overview

Children learn best from high quality interactions with attuned adults.

Highfield aims to provide a language rich environment for children to thrive. This starts in our 2-year-old room where practitioners play partner the children and begin the ‘back-and-forth interactions from an early age’ which ‘form the foundations for language and cognitive development.’ (Development Matters 2020)

An interaction at an early stage in a child’s language development may be copying sounds and adding sing-song tunes to engage the child. Rhyme, rhythm and music are key ingredients of the day-to-day fabric of Highfield. It helps us to ignite love of the spoken word.

Books, both fiction and non-fiction are shared constantly throughout the day. This may be as a group, a whole class or on a one-to-one. When adults read their intonation may seem ‘over-exaggerated,’ but the extra intonation or change in pitch or volume is necessary to engage young children and keep their attention.

Adults are always listening and responding to children. They will be commenting on what they are doing, echoing back their thoughts and ideas and extending them by adding new vocabulary or language structures. For example, a child that starts a sentence with “me” as a pronoun would not be corrected, just as a child with a stammer would be given time to express what s/he wanted to say. From this, the child will begin to express their own ideas, making links to their own experiences.

Attuned adults respond and question children sensitively through sustained shared thinking in their shared play experiences. For example, an “I wonder why?” question, in a play context, is far less direct and intimidating for a shy child and implies a shared need for answers.

Our expectations for communication and language development are generalised into our ‘Curricular Goal waypoints.’ For example, that children can follow a 2-part instruction and understand a ‘why’ question. These are used to assess if a child is falling behind in their development, so that prompt interventions can be put in place.

If any child is struggling with their language development and unable to express their feelings, the adult will help by trying to describe how they might be feeling. This is supported with visuals.

Specific language intervention is given for children that need it. ELKLAN trained practitioners work with the child, and the family, via zoom or face to face sessions. The focus is either on specific speech sounds or language understanding. Often it is targets set by a Speech and Language Therapist. We also work closely with health visitors, who may have highlighted a developmental delay in a child and asked us to enhance a child's language development.

Children with English as an additional language share their language with their peers. For example, in greetings. They are offered a 1-1 weekly session with a practitioner to support their language development.

Home loans (books, games or puzzles) are used with all children in the setting to further enrich their experiences of language through story.

Our vocabulary bank is designed to show the depth and breadth of language children are exposed to during their time at Highfield but our skilled practitioners are not limited by this list. Practitioners follow children's lead and develop back and forth conversations and well as the explicit, taught vocabulary list, to the rhythm of the year, seasons and our Story Curriculum.
